UK Outlook for Monday 23 Aug 2021 to Wednesday 1 Sep 2021:
Confidence is low to start this period, with uncertainties in the details of an area of low pressure which is likely to be in charge. Conditions should become more settled into next week, with plenty of dry weather with occasional sunny spells. These more settled conditions could remain throughout the week, however rain and showers could develop once again. This is most likely towards the south with rain probably moving in from the west. Winds likely to be light at the start of the period before perhaps increasing through the week, particularly if the unsettled weather arrives from the west. Temperatures most likely remaining close to, or above average, with warm spells likely at times.
